Ernest Herndon, Scott B. Williams : Paddling the Pascagoula before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Paddling the Pascagoula:

1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Second time around By Rob Malone I just reread this book and enjoyed it all over again. I've floated and fished on several stretches of the Pascagoula, Chickasawhay and Leaf rivers and consider it my home river. My ancestors settled on the upper Pascagoula before this area was part of the US and my family once owned land on the river with virgin timber. GREAT BOOK. 1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Paddling the Pascagoula By CDP's Once again habit of purchasing This book gives local perspective and knowledge of navigating the waters of the Pascagoula River for Kayakers and those who would take their canoes to this water. Good information and helpful information for longer floats or just a day. 1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Interesting By Frank H. Kubiak The book was like new condition. It made interesting reading, although it could have been spiced up a bit with a few fishing experiences. and of course color photographs. Regards Frank Science magazine describes the Pascagoula River of southeast Mississippi as the last unaltered large river system in the lower 48 states and southern Canada. Along its banks and watershed 600,000 acres of public lands--wildlife management areas, national forest, wilderness areas, national wildlife refuges, Nature Conservancy preserves--ensure the creation of a tremendous natural river system. To explore this sanctum, authors Ernest Herndon and Scott B. Williams traveled its entire 200-plus mile length by canoe and sea kayak, respectively. Each floated one of two major tributaries, Herndon taking the Leaf, Williams the Chickasawhay. They then met on the main Pascagoula and continued on to the Gulf Coast. Along the way the two saw alligators and ospreys, conservationists and good ole boys. They ran rapids and explored swamps, dodged logjams and investigated possible pollution sources. Herndon and Williams brought considerable skills and experience to their journey. Herndon has gone on backcountry trips to places as far-flung as Papua New Guinea and Alaska, while Williams paddled his sea kayak solo down the Mississippi and across the Caribbean. Together they've canoed and kayaked all over the South as well as in remote parts of Central America. Both agree the Pascagoula basin is one of the most intriguing outdoor destinations they have experienced. The book gives the armchair explorer a vivid feeling of what it would be like to float this wonderful river and provides a wealth of information about what makes it special and the problems that threaten it.
