Paul Timblich : Perune Juice before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Perune Juice:

HERE'S THE 'JUICE' ON PERU. A hefty pitcher of Peruvian culture, fresh from an Englishman who lived it, loved it, slurped it, and gulped it down full. Here, he regurgitates it for your easy pleasure and avid consumption. Paul Timblich, 35, single, dropped out of the rat race to teach English in Peru's second city, Arequipa, in 2001. Peruvian women were quite stunning to his dulled London eyes. But one in particular paralysed him, from waist upwards and thighs downwards. Timblich set out to conquer her but he was no Spanish conquistador, so he waited. And he waited... During the waiting, wanting, and longing, other stories unfold offering incredible glimpses of Peruvian life, some disturbing, some insane, all based on true events. A dead feminist also lurks, ready to pounce, like a furious guinea pig that just saw its lover get deep-fried. If you have any interest in a) understanding Peru, b) laughing at life (and death), or c) the sex life of a llama, this is for YOU. For a typical travelogue, hurry back to the bookstore NOW before you sniff the bitter sweet aroma of Perune Juice. So funny, my ears bled. AUTHORS MOTHER I've seen funnier. AUTHORS FATHER "Chewy, deeply satisfying." PERUVIAN LLAMA

About the Author Paul Timblich was an English teacher. He taught in Peru, Greece, Venezuela, China, Spain, Ethiopia, and England. With Perune Juice, he commences an improbable writing career.
